

SNOHOMISH PANTHERS BASKETBALL

Ferocity among Panther girls

By DOUG RAMSAY
contributing writer

Having reached the State 3A tournament twice consecutively, finishing second in 2016 and third in 2017, the Snohomish Panther girls team's chances to finish strong at State looked favorable last season. However, several late season injuries derailed that chance during districts, ending the season short of State.

All of those injuries have healed, and with a good number of returning starters, the Panthers are looking to reach the state tournament in late February.

While the Panthers will be without senior Kyra Beckman, who is out for the season with an injury, this year's team will feature some of the fastest and quickest guards head coach Ken Roberts has seen in a number of years. Roberts said he foresees the Panthers will have much more aggressive defense.

Speed will be the key word for this year's group of returning guards. Much of that speed comes from the fact that four of this season's guard all played on the Panther soccer team which recently finished their season taking the Wesco 3A District title and advancing to the state tournament.

Senior and four-year starter Maya DuChesne will be a leading force in this year's roster of guards. DuChesne was voted onto the all-Wesco first team last year. Junior Kinslee Gallatin was having an outstanding season last year as a starter, prior to pulling her ACL mid-season and had to sit out.

Joining Duchesne and Gallatin at starting guards will be sophomore Kayla Soderstrom, sophomore Bree Nichols along with freshmen

Cheyenne Rodgers and Gallatin's younger sister, Ella. Nichols, Soderstrom and Rodgers also played soccer this year. In addition, six-foot senior Courtney Perry will return to the starting post position for her third straight year.

Considering their Wesco 3A opponents will be tough enough to face, Roberts scheduled what could be some of the toughest non-league and non-conference teams to test the team. Along with non-league matchups against familiar rivals Glacier Peak and Lake Stevens, the Panthers will face several traditionally powerhouse teams this year that are all expected to compete for state titles in their classifications, including the 2A defending State Champion W.F. West Bearcats of Chehalis in a holiday break tournament.

The season opens this Friday with a league game against Cedarcrest of Duvall. Up next is the annual cross-valley rival match against the Glacier Peak Grizzlies in the Grizzly Den on Dec. 3.

Better days may be coming for boys

By DOUG RAMSAY
contributing writer

It has been a rough several years for the Snohomish boys basketball program, but better days may soon be coming. From the coaches down to the players there has been an upbeat presence throughout the program. As you listen to third-year head coach Jim Wilson talk about the upcoming season, you can almost see the dark clouds parting.

The team finished 5-16 in Wilson's first year as head coach and slightly better last year, finishing 6-14. But with just two weeks of pre-season practices, Wilson said that he has seen a great improvement from last season, which should only get better as the season goes on.

In his 21 years of coaching at the high school level, Wilson said he has not seen a more coachable group of kids as he has this year. Wilson said that this year's team has been great in the classroom and has bought into the program.

While much of the team is young and lack varsity experience, there will be two returning varsity players that Wilson expects to lead the team this year. 6-foot-5 senior Kolton Smith returns having averaged 16 points and 9 rebounds per game last year. "It's sweet to have Kolton back," Wilson said. "He has the size and can shoot well, so we will be leaning on him a lot this year."

Junior Jacob Brandvold will also be returning this year after a slow start last year. The 6-foot-2 guard had an injury that kept him sidelined much of the first half of the season last year. While he was able to play in the second half, Wilson said that he was slow to get up to speed. Coach Wilson hopes Brandvold's strength and size will be a positive factor under the boards as the team struggled defensively with rebounds last year.

Two new faces will be present on the court for varsity games this year, with both playing a role in the team's success: junior Crea Andrews and sophomore Grady Kentch will team up to hold down the post position. Andrews (6-foot-4) was able to see a little varsity time on the court towards the end of last year, while Kentch (6-foot-3) moves up from the junior varsity level.

Wilson said that he is excited to see Kentch be able to move up. The coach said that during the off-season Kentch has physically grown and his body is stronger this season, while being more physical on the court during pre-season practices.

The Panthers open the season with several non-league and non-conference games including hosting the Monroe Bearcats this Friday night and the Cascade Bruins on Dec. 4. But the most anticipated game of the season will be when the Archbishop Murphy Wildcats come to town on Jan. 7. The Wildcats, coached by long-time former Panther head coach Len Bone joined the Wesco 3A this year. It will be Bone's first time coaching against the Panthers. Bone still teaches at Snohomish High School and said that it will be a tough game for him, especially because several of the Panther players are in his classes which may make for an awkward experience the following day depending on the game's outcome.

The game will also be a new experience for Wilson and feel a slight bit awkward, who coached alongside Bone for ten years. "I never coached against Len in a season game," Wilson said. "It will be fun, he's a good friend and I think it will be a great rivalry."

GLACIER PEAK GRIZZLIES BASKETBALL

Can boys' team hold dominance?

By MICHAEL WHITNEY

Can the Grizzlies repeat? Glacier Peak was last year's powerhouse in 4A, going 13-1 in its conference, taking the districts title and making it into the state Hardwood Classic.

Half the package is still there, as four kids graduated and four are returning.

The will is there.

The camaraderie is there.

"It's definitely a good group coming back," Coach Brian Hunter said. He's built up a towering defense, benefiting from a strong roster that largely stands above six feet tall.

Starting seniors Noah Forman and Evan Mnannes are back, as well as Fletcher Douglas, who'll also be a senior this year.

Douglas is "going to have a great year," Hunter said.

Others Hunter praised were Brayden Quantrille and Cedric Jones.

"I've been really fortunate" over the years to have strong teams, Hunter said. Each year starts fresh, but with a dedication to foundational basketball.

"We're one of the better teams defensively in the area,"

Hunter said. "That's one of the foundations" for the team.

The team works hard with fast, structured practices to push players.

Basketball is a mental game as well as a physical one. "More times than not, the more mentally prepared team" can succeed in a game, Hunter said.

Every player knows their role in being competitive.

"Playing hard - we want our kids to make the maximum effort and be smart on the court," Hunter said. Being focused is "ingrained" in the players.

The team went through 30 camps this summer, including their annual trip to a camp at the University of San Diego.

One thing the coach looks forward to is that the district playoffs structure merges King County with Snohomish County for 4A. This helps prepare the team for State and gives "a true playoff setting," he said.

"It's a challenge for us, but the cool part is we'll be different" — (it's) a new challenge — "for them, too," Hunter said.

Reaching State tourney just seems so familiar for the Grizzly girls

By MICHAEL WHITNEY

Nobody should ever count the Grizzlies out. This is a team that had a 16-8 season (12-3 district) last year.

Coach Brian Hill's been with the program since the day Glacier Peak High School opened. He's seen the team reach new heights and gain recognition.

While some top players graduated last year, "we still have a good squad," Hill said. "We're experienced, but we're kind of young, so that's good," he said.

The perceived standouts are numerous: Sophomore

Aaliyah Collins heads the list. She showed up onto the varsity team and "surprised the league," Hill said.

Seniors Haley Grambo and Sydney Guffey are back as leaders — they were part of the team's State run in 2017.

Others Hill highlighted are sophomore Madison Rubino, junior Kiera Hollerman and sophomore Maya Erling. Many have been playing together as pre-teens.

The coach said some keys will be a disciplined offense and focus on mental strength on the court.

The goal is always the same: State. The Grizzlies have made State every year since 2010 except one time.

The team might be a little faster than usual, which Hill thinks means "we'll be able to apply more pressure across the board." There are five girls who can play lockdown defense.

Hill is excited for this year because the 4A regionals will bring top King County teams into the tournament mix this year.

The season opens with the cross-town rival SHS Panthers on Monday, Dec 3 at 7:15 pm. at Glacier Peak.

MONROE BEARCATS BASKETBALL

Bearcats hope to stay golden

By MICHAEL WHITNEY

The Monroe Bearcats this year are a young team but not a green one.

Superstar seniors Colby Kyle and Spencer Davidson are gone, but this won't leave the team stranded.

There's still star school athletes such as Efton Chism III, Blake Rybar, and some new faces in the mix as the Bearcats try to repeat a stellar season. Last year the team was second overall in 4A.

Chism was an important cog for the Bearcats' machine last year, and Coach Ben Williams said he'll be stepping up to a larger leadership role this year.

Williams is emphasizing to make sure the team is cohesive, and the camaraderie is great so far. The team went to summer camps regularly, and the guys are getting together well. The biggest focus now will be concentration to yield consistency.

For example, junior varsity player Matthias Guerra, 5-foot-9-inches, has plenty going for him. Guerra played one of the final games of last year's season, called up to the varsity squad from JV.

Junior Mcklain Thompson,

Star player Colby Kyle (above) is now playing at Princeton University, but the team is doubling down on its efforts while working on its fundamentals who stands 6-foot-2-inches, and sophomore Sam Olson, who stands 6-foot-5, also should make an impression on the court, Williams said.

Rybar and Chism may be known from the gridiron this fall.

On the develop-ment side, on the court already. It helps immensely.

The team had a 17-6 overall season last year (12-3 league), with two losses accounted for from their two games against last year's powerhouse Glacier Peak, which went 13-1 in its conference.

Last year's run took them into districts, reaching the second round. The Bearcats almost reached State only to see it taken from their grasp in a 65-50 game against Jackson.

Monroe girls have many returning players

Hard chargers Monique Fierke and Emily Toycen have graduated, but they were the only two players to exit the team due to graduation.

The Lady Bearcats began their season Nov. 24 at a jamboree in Woodinville. The first season game will be a home game Monday, Dec. 3 against Mount Si in the Bearcat Den.

The Bearcats went 9-14 last year (5-10 league) and will undoubtedly want to improve.

EVERETT SEAGULLS BASKETBALL

Coach sees promise in the girls

By ANGELA COOPER-McCORKLE

The Everett Seagulls are poised to soar in the standings if Coach Luther Weathersby's vision holds true.

Entering his fourth season, the coach said the team is the healthiest he's seen it.

The team recently hired a trainer and is doing offseason training, which can be a big advantage. The Seagulls girls also got a chance to teambuild at a summer basketball camp in Eastern Washington and during June tournaments.

EHS has averaged five wins and 16 losses the past three seasons. Weathersby's looking for the team to rise to the middle of the pack, but he's most focused on the fundamentals and long-term team building.

"The wins are nice but we want to make sure we provide a first class program ... we're working on internal things and hopefully that shows on the court." Those internals include "making sure our GPAs are the best, (players) get away-game meals, wear nice equipment and uniforms, just making the kids feel good about themselves."

His on court strategy is all about fundamentals, too.

"We're going to press and run, not going to have any secrets about it."

The team will look to three anchors: seniors

Brooklyn Johnson and Morgan Carter, and sophomore Farrah Parish. "She's our point guard and she's going to be special. She's a hard worker, plays a lot of basketball and has a passion." He said these three are already taking on team leadership roles.

Weathersby also thinks the Seagulls can capitalize on the area's teams losing many strong seniors because of graduation.

"We won the games we should have but got hammered by the top of the league, but again, (our) kids hung in there. I was really proud of that group - no one quit, they all stayed in there."

For this year, "we can say what we want to say, but we have to prove it on the court," he said.

Throughout his time at EHS, Weathersby's been deeply committed to increasing play for younger girls and he's seen a strong group of seventh and eighth grade girls rising in local programs.

"We're just going to keep stacking teams at all grade levels to close the gap even more."

Their opening game is the annual Bru-Gull Fest at EvCC on Nov. 30 versus Cascade. It's at 6:15 p.m.

Boys will use speediness in games

By MICHAEL WHITNEY

The Seagulls this year will have to be scrappy.

With a squad of guys with just one skyscraper in the bunch, "our strength has to be using our footspeed, using our quickness and our shooting," seasoned Coach Bryce Levin said.

It means passing the ball will be at a premium, and that works perfectly for a team that's cohesive and has dialed in key skills.

The Seagulls reached districts last year with a core group who would net 12 or so points a game such as Elijah Ross-Rutter, Bogdan Fesiienko and Wes Erickson.

Those seniors are gone, but in their place are a group that includes senior Mason Cobos, junior Jayden White, sophomore Taras Fesiienko, and seniors Andrew Olson and Ethan Ollis, each of whom Levin thinks will be scoring regularly.

Taras Fesiienko, who played junior varsity late last season, will be playing point guard.

The only tall guy is White, standing six foot six.

"If we continue to get better, taking it game by game, I can see us as a districts team," Levin said, "And I definitely think this team is capable of making a run for State."

The passing game fits Levin's philosophy to have lots of skilled players on the court. It not only develops a team culture, but it opens up the roster, he said. It keeps the team balanced.

"We've got great team camaraderie, it's a tight group of friends" among the players, Levin said.

Olson and Ollis likely will be senior team leaders, Levin said. White and Taras Fesiienko also could become team leaders this year, the coach said.

The depth from the JV level has helped. It's almost like the Seagulls have got this down to a machine of fresh talent waiting in the wings. Building that depth comes from working constantly on drills in shooting and basics during the offseason.

"We're definitely a team with good depth and we play that for our advantage," Levin said.

Levin's coaching style is to bring energy and keep kids accountable and grounded.

As part of being grounded, Levin said he is planning to have a Coaches Against Cancer game and a game for Multiple Sclerosis during the season.

The Seagulls' first home game was Nov. 27 after press time. The annual Bru-Gull Fest against the Cascade Bruins is at 7:45 p.m. Friday, Nov. 30 at EvCC.
